

To whom it may concern,

On Saturday the 26th of November, 2016, my fiancé, Chad Robinson, sat me down for two hours at home and spoke to me about wanting to end his life. He'd spoken about it many times before, this night didn't feel any different. It was just as hard to listen to as it had been every other time he'd talk about it.

It worried me deeply whenever he would tell me he was feeling that lost. He asked me to dance with him in the kitchen, something we did often to our favourite music.

An hour later he left the house and it was the last time I saw him alive. It was the last time I'd ever see him again.

He was missing for three weeks. It was all over the news, on the radio, in the paper. He was an ex NRL Rugby League Player and the news was relentless with the coverage.

I'd see a photo of him I took only weeks before out in the city for his birthday, now on the nightly news asking people to search for him. That same photo I took with his beautiful big smile in it was now used as an official photo to find my partner who I had planned a future with, the person I couldn't wait to see each night I'd walk through the front door, the same man I curled up on the lounge with at the end of each day.

He drove off that night while I'd gone to the bedroom for a few minutes. He'd planned this for months, he'd written a Will a month previously. I had no idea. It was one of the best months we'd had together.

A few days before Christmas his body was found, he'd driven his car off a small cliff only 15 minutes from home. My whole world fell apart that day.

Chad suffered from Bipolar Disorder. He had been struggling with it since his late teens.

Not many people knew, and even if they did, they didn't talk about it with him enough.

His death has torn apart any of us who adored him. He was unique. He was generous and fun, smart and capable. He was my very best friend and my greatest love.

On the 6th of October, 2017, an amazing group of people will be holding a Charity Golf Day in support of the RUOK Day and to also launch The Chad Robinson Foundation, which will be raising awareness and necessary funding to stand beside and support anyone with Bipolar Disorder and Mental Health challenges.

I'm writing to you to request your support for this day. We are hoping to have items we can auction off on the day that will attract a high price so our bidders can assist us in reaching an outstanding target that will actually make a difference in many lives. Do you have the opportunity or the empathy to be a part of Chad's day?

I have chosen each company I've contacted with great thought and it is because I value your involvement and know that you are of a reputable character. This event is exclusive, although we will be publishing it prior in the largest Sydney papers and also popular radio stations, we would be happy to mention your company if you choose to support our event in a way that endeavours to assist us reach our goal.

I have attached the relevant documents in regards to the Golf Day itself and would love the opportunity to chat with you further about this.

I look forward to hearing from you soon.

Thank you so much for your time and consideration.

Kind Regards

Rani Morris

0415 138 818

thebravecollective@gmail.com